WHAT THE WORLD LOST. The part sought for jowels rich and rare All day in vain, but in the twillight dran when on the attermost verys of mad deep A beaven-born implication came to him. And famey shaped a sweet and tender song, So full of passion that the poet's name and the an arrow have been sped along Until it bereed the pinnacle of fame He seized a pen and paper, but before A precious word was writ, there did appear A friend of his—an artist, at the door And saked him out to have a glass of beer. Thus lost the world a gem, for, sad to say.

BUNDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 12, 1882.

ENDER THE SNOW. It was Christmas eve in the year fourtien, And as ancient dalesmen used to tell. The wildest winter they ever had seen, With the snow lying deep on moor and feil. When Wagoner John got out his team.

Miller and Whitefoot, Duke and Gray,
With the light in his eyes of a young man's dream,
As he thought of his wedding on New-Year's day To Ruth, the maid with the bonnie brown hair. and eyes of the despest, sumplest blue

And true to her troth, for her heart was true "Thou's surely not going," shouled mine host.
"Thou'd be lost in the drifts as sure as thou's born, Thy lace winnot want to wed wi' a ghost'
And that's what thou'll be on Christmas morn. "He eleven long miles from Skipton toon, To Blueberg hooses and Washburn dale, Thou had better turn back and sit thee doon, And comfort thy heart wi's drop o' good alo."

Turn the swallows flying south, Turn the vines against the sun, Herds from rivers in the drouth. Man must dare or nothing's done

So what cares the lover for storm or drift. Or perfl of death on the haggard way. He sings to himself like a lark in the lift. And the joy in his heart turns December to May.

He dreams he is walking by Washburn side, Walking with Ruth on a summer's day. Singing that song to his bounte bride, like own wife now forcest and aye.

New read me this riddle, New Huth should hear. That song of a heart in the clutch of doors, It stole on her sar, distinct and stear, As if her lover was in the room. And read me this riddle, how Buth should know, As she bounds to throw open the heavy door, That her loves is lost in the drifting slow, Dying or dead on the great wild moor.

"Help! help!!" "Lost! lost!!"

Rings through the night as she rushes away, Bireight to the drift where her lover lay. And swift they lean after her into the night, Into the driffs by Blueburg hill, Pullar, Ward, Schimon, each with his light To find her there, holding him, white and still.

"He was good in the drifts, then," Forgetting to play, Fifty years since come Christman day.

"Nay, nay, they were wed," the dalesman cried, By Parson Carmait 'o New Year's day, "Bonnie Ruth were great-great grandair's bride, And Massier Frankland gave her away."

"But how did she find him under the enow?"
They oried with a laughter, touched with tears,
"May leds," he said, eartly, "we never can know,
No, notif we live a hundred years." "There's a sight o' things gan To the making o' men," Then I rushed to my play With a whoop and away.

As they descended the hill they kept watch of the firs's progress, and before they had passed Pacific street the flames were rushing on like a train of powder. The party commenced running, nor abated their pace until they reached the store of Ridthe & Eaton, on Bacramento street, two doors west of Leidesdorf. The block was on fire at the corner of Montgomery when they passed it. They reished up stairs to secure their trunks, which were in the upper story; and be-fore they descended to the street the roof of the building was in full blaze. They saved their trunks, but they dared not wait to collect some other articles belonging to them. This experience, however, was sufficient to convince them of Don Pedro's wisdom in regard to flan Francisco conflagrations. The structures in those days were of the slightest and most inflammable materials; the rooms lined with cloth and paper—buildings which, after a few weeks in this atmosphere, became tinder—food for the first sourk. If a fire broke out, this dry material burned so suddenly and furiously that though the sir were a dead calm, the wind soon rushed in sweeping all in its path.

Two large glaciers, one eight and the other fifteen miles wide were crossed, the passage being one of great difficulty and many dangers. One of those glaciers, the smaller, reached and terminated in the sea; but the other had formed for itself a deep valley in front of the terminal moraines, being of great size. At that season of the year there was a continuous noise like thunder caused by avalanches of snow and ice from the high mountains on each side of the glaciers. He started accompanied, with a party of Koloshes from a village near Cape Yaktas, and reached their village with his stores in safety. Here, however, he found himself a prisoner. The barbarians, like those on the Copper river, and with much better reason, fancied they had a prize which it would be a sin to part with. They not only refused to accompany the travelers further, but refused to let them proceed by themselves. As applicants are examined by a board of marine officers, and these officers are the representatives of the corps, admission is wholly a matter of taste with them. Senator McPherson has of-fered a bill to reorganize the marine corps, but there is no amendment of the present system of appointments. There is no reorganization to benefit the officers, and not a word for the privates, in Senator McPherson's bill. At present all appointments come from civil Heretofore the places have been largely families of Washington and elsewhere. In the meantime there are scores of men in the ranks who stand no chance whatever of promotion beyond the grade of sergeant-major. Many of the first sergeants and non-commissioned officers of the corps have served for twenty consecutive years, and some even longer, but in all these years no commandant of the corps has dered to violate his social obligations to his brother snobs by ever recom-mending one of them for a lieutenancy. For this work Mr. Field had received the right to put some sleeping-cars on the Lake Shore railread, where they were a failure. In the December number of the Ornithologist and Oologist, Mr. C. M. Crowell, of Haywards, Cal., has the following interesting artithe descriptive of the habits of the California quail while breeding:

On the 27th of May, 1880, I placed some brush and rubbish fifteen feet from the front steps, in a triangle of the drivoway. On the 2d of June I stooped down to set fire to the brush, and saw three quaits eggs. I left them, hoping if it was a quait that had been there she would come again. I then pilled more brush she would come again. I then piled more brush on so that no one could discover my treasures, and carry them off. I called the attention of Dr. Cooper to the location of the nest, as carriages and persons were passing nearly every hour of the day within four feet of the nest, and he thought it

Henry Chapman, ornithologist, and I. Mailiard, collogist, of Nicatio, called, and both were confident that when she commenced sitting the interruptions she would be liable to meet with would frighten her from her nest.

June 7th I put my hand in the nest and the quail flow out, but made her morning call on the fifth I man 14th I went to the nest and found. the 5th. June 14th I went to the next and found her sitting on fourteen eggs. I had my face within eighteen inches of her, and could see her eyes, but she did not seem disturbed or nnoyed. In the meantime for the week that had passof the male quail. He would place himself in a tree in the orchard, three hundred yards rom the house, give his call note—Krick kri three-quarters of a cent more on the bridge fare, for instance, from New York to Albany was $3. By charging extra toil on the bridge get to the roadway, which ruse and orchard, where he would meet house and orchard, where he would meet train of Wagner cars so as to force neeple into train of Wagner cars so as to force neeple into them, after which they would slowly pick their way down through the grohard. The male keeps a watchful guard over his mate, and on seeing danger utters a quick pit, pit, both to protect and urge on his mate. After gaining a safe distance, the female takes her dustbath, when they go to the creek, walking upand down the water's edge—reterning in a round-about way to the nest. The male seldom went nor hear from him again until the morning's call, between 10 and 11 o'clock, when the same meeting and greetings would be renewed.

The hen quall was frightened from her nest three different times—the last was two days before she was going to hatch. It was about 8 o'clock in the evening; and I was having a wire screen cage placed over the brush, wishing to keep her and her chicks: The brush was disturbed in some way so that she flew out, and away to the orchard. As I looked out into the darkness after her, I exclaimed. "That is the last of my qual hatching." I decided to leave the eggs in the nest over night. In the morning I found her, faithful and determined, on her nest again, proving that disturbing a quali, either before or while sitting; will not make her forsake her nest. That night I succeeded in getting the case over her. When the morn-ing 10 o'clock call came she left her nest, attempting to get out, but seeing the wheat scat-tered in the cage site of it, and went back to mest and eggs as usual.

The second day the male, after calling and repeating his call many times in vain, came up to see why his mate did not put in her appearance. He walked around the cage, uttering his warning call, pit, pit, but in a lower tone than when frightened. She tried to get out, but not succeeding, he left. Her uneasiness continuing, I put the eggs under a hantam her, and hatched ten of the fourteen eggs. consolidation of all the steeping-car interests except Yaguer's.

Public indignation in this city is decidedly against the Yanderbilt company for the miserable and stupid way improvements have been ruled off that road—such as the block-signal system—and necessary laborors reduced, as in the case of the two flagmen who were formerly used in the cut where the accident took place, one of whom has been discharged within the year, leaving the other man to perambulate the whole cut.

I then put in the box another male quall which I had, thinking; companiously would quiet her attempts to get out, which it failed to do. In the morning about four o'clock I was awakened by repeated angrey salls of a male quall. I hurby repeated angry calls of a male quait. I hur-ried to my window—which was not twenty feet from the cage and saw a male quail flying to get in. I went out to move the trap in front of the cage, as I saw that would be the only way to catch him. As I went to the cage he

The day before the trial he disapin which he said he was about to start to Poru. A gentleman of San Francisco stated almost positively that Hamilton left for that point on the steamer Newbern from Ham Francisco.

It was removed at a late hour last night that a dispatch was received from Victoria apprising Himmons of the arrost of Bradley in disguise. However, nothing definite could be learned. It also reached the ear of an Outgon Kian reporter that Dolly Adams had been before the grand jury last Tuesday, where she told her story, and that inasmuch as there was no corroborative evidence no action was taken until vesterday, when both Adams and Flippin were subspensed and toestified, in all probability, as above stated. Simmons, says the bare statements made by these women would be of little consequence, but that they substantiate facts which he had previously learned, totally unknown to thom. The women, sithough they do not admit it, seem to have been laboring under the fear of the law and the vengeance of Bradley, or they would certainly have told this horrible atory, without having to be pressed to do so.

Telegraphic messages have been sent to all points where it would be possible for the par-ticipants in this crime to have gone, and al-though Hamilton may have escaped, it is very probable that the other parties implicated will be captured and brought to justice within a short time. It is almost impossible for Brad-ley to escape; for should she be in Victoria or on the Sound, or en route to Ban Francisco she will certainly be arrested. No advice could be received from Victoria late last night as the late went down about ten o'clock.

IN MEMORIAM.

JORIE BETTMAN. Oh, Death! again thou hast taken in thy hand A youthful maiden, a new-born fower, One which grew more beauteous with each hour, And was an emblem of a far and better land. One who ne'er had a thought but of the pure . One who was all-leving and good and kind ; One whose very soul and spotless mind The angels now embalm to keep secure.

It seems strange to think that she is below In the lonely, sad and new-made grave; There alone, with no one near her, save The flowers which to the grave and grow. Ab. God! when the book of life is read.

Do not stop to count her youthful wrongs, But pass them gently by, amid the songs Of the blessed angels who watch o'er the dead.

In this respect she does not differ materially from Jeff Davis, who does not yet know that the civil war is ended. But it is in the person of Mrs. Hoolagahn, the mother-in-law of the mat-tyred Ryan, that we see the clock of the ages turned back and the modern Scipio's triumph shorn of its laurels. That doughty lady informed the interviewer that she herself could "whup Soolavan." The lady should go a little slow, in this matter. She should remember that Bullivan was the man who won the fight, and not the one who lost it; and the mere fact that she has been in the habit of walloping livan whenever he refused to "shon!" for the potern, is no criterion of her ability to lick Sullivan. Besides, if she hadn't licked Ryan so often, and completely broken his coursee, he might have got away with the fight. Who

The managers find this better attraction than a big name on the bills.

So microscopically perfect is the watch-making machinery now in use, that screws are cut with nearly 600 threads to the inch-though the finest used in the water has 250. These threads are invisible to the laked eye, and it akes 144,000 of these screws to weigh a pound their value being six pounds of pure gold. Glasgow, Scotland, is the second city, in int of population, of Great Britain, baving 750,000. It has upwards of 144 miles of pub lic streets, the largest ship yards and the largest chemical works in the world, and two chimneys—one 450 and the bther 460—which are unequaled in height by any ever built. The cultivation of the vine in the Crimes has been very successful—at least it would seem so from the rapid rise in the value land. A few years ago the common price, for land was from $35 to $50 per desiatins (two and a half acres), but land which was sold at those prices is now fetching from $550 to $700. Mr. Durgate has presented to the French Academy of Science $10,000, the interest to be given to the author of the work best adapted to console humanity. The first prize will be adjudged in 1685 to the author of a work giving the most exhaustive diagnosts of indica tions of death and means to prevent premature

It is said that hollow steel shafting is made in a way which most people we ald like to see in France actually done before their own eyes. The motal is first cast around a core of lime, the ingot being finally rolled into shatting, the lime core going with it, and diminishing in diameter in the same proportion as the motal even when the total diameter is reduced as low

The attempt to light the streets of Liverpool by electricity is to be discontinued. It is said that the British Electric Light Company have lost a large sum in the course of the experiments which have been made. The contract between the Edinburg town council and the Auglo-American Brush Company for the lighting of Princes street and the bridges with the electric light has been ended.

Potato flour, or the dried/pulp of the potato, is attaining great importance in the arts. It is stated that in Lancashire, England, 20,000 tons of it are sold-annually, and it brings at present in Liverpool about double as much in the market as wheat flour. It is used for sizing and other manufacturing purposes, and when precipitated with acid is turned into starch. When calcined it is employed as a
